MOZART SCHOOL OF MUSIC A Few Rules to Enable Women to Know
The vacan department of the Mozart School What Summer Really Is.

Manager.

There are two or three ways in which women can render their state during hot weather even more purgatorial than it is by itself. One excellent plan, if they wish to enjoy the experience of the natives of the tropies, is to consult the thermometer with regularity. To fly to it on waking and every hour of the day thereafter and to note with gloomy forebodings the upward and onward course of the mercury will death from spontaneous combustion is not far distant. Another excellent plan to follow if one really pines to feel the heat in all its intensity is to begin the day by announcing to the family that "this promises to be the warmest day so far this season." To follow up that announcement by a careful study of the list of deaths in the morning newspaper will add about five degrees to the temperature. The sufferers from sunstroke and exhaustion should be attentively marked, and then the list of in dog days.

The woman who is determined to know summer at its worst should follow up the dissemination of the cheerful "city mortality" news by reading the encouraging expert reports on the state of the lake water. She must not allow herself to be side-tracked by any suggestions as to the propriety of boiling all the drinking water, but must simply anticipate plague, pestilence and famine. She can also become a little warmer by the effort of violent invective against those who have the care of the water supply. She will not know who they are, perhaps, but the invective can be all the more heated and heating on that account.

If at the same time she is reading the paper she is also eating a breakfast 710 AM 720 AM suitable for February of oatmeal and 110 AM 120 Au cream, broiled ham and eggs, muffins Handle Express.
